It's a 7 year old battery and it doesn't look like the electrolyte levels have ever been topped off. In this case, a battery maintainer isn't going to help much - since the battery probably needs to be replaced.

Hi lefttit486, Unfortunately Apple does not provide warranty service on batteries which don't report as consumed or "service soon". If your battery health is normal and you have over 80% Full Charge Capacity, you can still get your battery replaced for $69 at an Apple store or an Apple authorized service provider.

I have 1:1 net metering, we don't have outages even once a year, so adding a home battery basically doubles the cost of a solar project to save pennies (arbitrage off peak vs peak pricing energy usage). In my case and everyone around here, you just use the grid as your unlimited sized battery pack. No cost, but all the benefits of a home battery.
